The Land Talker says:

Greetings! Harvest has been a struggle this fall. There are several acres of corn and soybeans still in the field. Hopefully the ground will freeze and those acres will get harvested. November was a very active month for land auctions but I expected even more activity. The total acres auctioned in November 2018 was 18,228, whereas the November 2017 total was 19,358. I was surprised by this, as I thought there would have been more farms coming to the market due to some financial stress. That is just not happening. The farms coming to market are mostly from farm estates and/or trusts, and the owners are just ready to sell. The land market is holding up surprising well in spite of all the negative press about the farm economy and increase in farm bankruptcies. Quality is king when margins are tight, and good farms are selling very well while lower quality land is being discounted. I have visited with numerous farm managers across the state of Iowa and one thing is consistent from each of them - cash rents will be stable in 2019. According to the farm managers I spoke with, only a couple of tenants asked for concessions in rent and that was only for a 5-10% reduction. I think the reason cash rents are so stable when margins are so tight is because tenants want control of acres, and their landlords know if they have a tenant wanting concessions there will be a number of farmers who will be willing to pay up to get those acres. Once a tenant loses a farm, they will never get that land back. As long as cash rents are stable, I just don't see much reduction in land prices. I predict prices will continue to be stable for the most part for good quality land. There are some buying opportunities for lower quality land as those prices are adjusting but rents appear to be stable. Stock market volatility will bring investors to the market looking for stability land ownership offers.

Talk to you in a month!
